Mexico City.- The National Front for Sorority, Digital Defenders of the Ley Movement Olimpia and the IPN Digital Justice Assembly called on feminist collectives, organizations social workers and human rights defenders to join a collective action this 9th December before the acquittal of Diego N by Judge Francisco Salazar Silva.

This Monday, the initial hearing of the third of eight students from the Institute will be held. National Polytechnic (IPN) who reported Diego N for the crime against sexual privacy, after 166 thousand images and 20 thousand videos generated with intelligence were found artificial for digital sexual exploitation, on the defendant's iPad. Feminists and students They will take collective action so that the judge's ruling in the first two cases is not repeated. repeat.

On Wednesday, December 4, Judge Francisco Salazar Silva ruled in favor of Diego N. arguing that "although the crime against the students was proven, it was unknown if it was owner of the iPad," ignoring the evidence and perpetuating impunity and the patriarchal pact, according to groups denounced.

Faced with this decision, students and feminists joined together to denounce Judge Francisco Salazar Silva, Chief Justice Rafael Guerra Álvarez and the Judiciary of Mexico City for "validating digital violence and abandoning the victims," since this The decision was made within the framework of the 16 days of activism against violence towards women.

"This case exposes the digital exploitation that turns women's bodies into commodities, violating their fundamental rights. It symbolizes the betrayal of the women of Mexico, sending the message that digital violence is tolerated. We will not allow this ruling to become final."

Through a statement In which they expressed their position, they also pointed out that During the class action they demanded accountability, a judicial perspective focused on the victims and justice for the IPN colleagues. "Collective resistance is key to transform a system that has failed women. We demand justice, dignity, and the application of "Olimpia Law" they wrote.

Olimpia Law and its relationship with IPN students

In case you don't know, the Olimpia Law is a set of reforms to the General Law on Access to Information Women to a Life Free of Violence and the Federal Penal Code in which violence is recognized digital. It also establishes that crimes that violate the sexual privacy of individuals must be punished. people through digital media.

At 19 years old, Olimpia Coral Melo was a victim of digital violence when a video of her with Intimate sexual content was disseminated without her consent. From that moment on, she faced rejection; trial; social stigma; re-victimization; and community, social, structural, and institutional violence. When she tried to report it to the Public Ministry, she was told that what had happened to her "was not a crime."

It was then that she realized that there were no mechanisms to protect her, she decided build it and therefore, promoted a law to classify the crime of digital violence. Since So, it has been approved in several states of the republic, thus helping women, who have gone through the same digital violence, to demand justice.

"The Olimpia Law has established itself as a pioneering movement in Latin America by making visible and naming digital violence as a form of violence that violates the dignity, security and rights of women. women. This legal framework was created with the courage of survivors and advocates."

Likewise, she created the National Front for Sorority (FNS) to provide support to women who suffer digital violence and bring together feminists and collectives in the country. From the first hearing in the case of the IPN students, Olimpia and the FNS have been supporting them, as they They will do this Monday, before the initial hearing of the third student begins, with an event collective.
